She understands the depth of responsibility for decision-making that commercial landholders face, and she works directly with landholders to build their skills and knowledge of pasture management, assessment and feed budgeting and how to incorporate climate forecasts into farm decision making. Interpreting farm specific predicted rainfall, soil moisture, pasture growth, and animal performance and health risks up to six months in advance with www.Ag360.com.au is one way farmers can use advanced technology to assist with decision making amidst climate variability, while working towards improved environmental and production sustainability. You won't want to miss this session which will include Q&A.
